ESKİŞEHİR

The area is inhabited since before the Phrygians founded Doryleum near today's Eskişehir. The area to the south of Eskişehir is known as "Phrygian Valley"; even today and contains many remnants from Phrygians (some parts of the valley is within the borders of Kütahya and Afyonkarahisar provinces). Eskişehir is a haven of liberalism in a largely conservative region, which stems from the large student population, as well as the already- progressive-minded culture of refugees from Crimea and Balkans settled in the city in the late 19th century during the decline of Ottoman Empire, descendants of whom constitute most of the native population.
